PREFACE

THIS compilation was first suggested by the needs of the organisers of the Pan-Celtic Congress held in Edinburgh in May, 1920. Acting as convener of the Scottish Committee for that event, the editor found that there was in existence no list of persons who took an active interest in such matters, either in Scotland or in any of the other Celtic countries. His resolve to meet this want was cordially approved by the leaders of the Congress; circulars were issued to all whose addresses could be discovered, and these were invited to suggest the names of others who ought to be included. The net result is not quite up to expectation, but it is better than at first seemed probable. The Celt may not really be more shy or more dilatory than men of other blood, but certainly the response to this effort has not indicated on his part any undue forwardness. Even now, after the lapse of a year and the issue of a second and a third circular, the list of Celtic authors and musicians is far from full. Perhaps a second edition of the book, when called for, may be more complete.

Such as it is this first Celtic Who's Who will be found useful as an authoritative book of reference, supplying the addresses of well-known workers and the principal facts regarding them. For that reason it must win the approval and support of all interested in Celtic literature.

The book does not pretend to comprise the names of living Celts who have won for themselves a position in the politics, the literature, the science, the art or the inventions of the world. Such names will be found in the ordinary biographical year-books. This handbook is concerned with those who are to-day recognised as contributors to the literature or music, or who otherwise join in the racial activities, of the Celtic peoples. Even here, as already suggested, it is incomplete, but such as it is, and from its narrower province, the work shows that the Celtic mind makes a greater contribution to general literature than is generally recognised.

Naturally and rightly a large part of this contribution is expressed in the different Celtic languages, but not a little is in French or English, and some of the rest will yet be translated into these tongues and so made available to the world at large.

It may be noted that the space occupied by the different Celtic nationalities is curiously disproportionate. This was to be expected, for the life and sentiment of the race do not flow with equal fulness in the different countries. Already the interesting Celtic language of Cornwall has ceased to exist as a spoken tongue, and the Gaelic of the Isle of Man, that little Cinderella of the Celtic sisters, is at a low ebb. Even in Scotland, and in spite of the laudable efforts of its lovers, the ancient Gaelic is barely holding its own. But in Brittany the Breton speech shows remarkable vigour despite official discouragement; in Ireland the native Gaelic is gaining more in print than it is losing in current speech, and in Wales, the ancient British or Welsh, that indomitable language that survived two great invasions, the Roman and the Saxon, is to-day a living evidence of robust nationhood.

These general facts are reflected in the following pages, with the exception that political distraction has prevented Ireland from giving here its full representation, and distance has deprived not only the Bretons but the Celts of Australia and America of their proper shares.

The book has also some value as a quite reliable, if somewhat sketchy index of the breadth of the Celtic field. Ordinary French and English readers have usually but a hazy notion of Celtic affairs, and, indeed, there is often apparent among the different Celtic peoples themselves a tendency to confine attention to their own immediate district, or at farthest to their own native country. But the circuit of the Celtic Fatherland must wider go. And a handbook like this, containing names and addresses and some references to the work of Celtic students in many lands, will help to correct the narrowing tendency and to remind readers of the far-reaching scope and variety of the Celtic field.

Further examination of the contents of the book will reveal interesting facts regarding the diverse directions in which members of the different Celtic nationalities pursue their studies; the extraordinary differences in the ages of students, from the ruddy stripling to the hoary sage of four-score years, and the equally marked differences in the avocations of those who form this literary commonwealth. May their number increase!

Address—22 Rue Servandoni, ParisVI.

Born in Paris 28th July, 1842.

M. Gaidoz made his beginnings in the study of Celtic matters at a time when they were hardly distinguished from "Celtomania," at least in France, and when this branch of Philology was not taught yet in Universities or High Schools.

Founder and first editor of the "Revue Celtique" (the first number of which appeared in May 1870) of the Folk-Lore Magazine "Melusine," 1877-1912, the latter with the assistance and close collaboration of his friend the late Eug. Rolland. Among the numerous publications of Prof. Gaidoz on various matters we mention the following as concerning Celtic lore:—

Gargantua, Essai de mythologie celtique, reprinted from the Revue Archeologique, Sept., 1868, translated into Welsh by the Rev. John Peter in the Traethodydd, January, 1869; Esquisse de la religion des Gaulois, Paris, 1879, La religion gauloise et le gui de chene, reprinted from Revue de l'Historie des Religions, vol. II., 1880. Le dieu gaulois Soleil et le symbolisme de la roue, reprinted from the Revue Archeologique, for the years 1884-1885.

Petition pour les langues provinciales, with an appendix: La poesie bretonne pendant la Guerre de 1870-71, Paris, 1903.

Pour le centenaire de Gaspar Zeuss, fondateur de la philologie celtique, Paris, 1906.

Un vieux rite medical, Paris, 1892.

Le grand dieu gaulois chez les Allebroges, Paris, 1902. The two last contributions are "Festschriften," intended to commemorate the 50th and 60th anniversaries of the election of Anatole de Barthelemy as member of the Soc. des Antiq. de France.

For a fuller biography of Prof. G.'s works see Catalogue general des livres imprimes de la Bibliotheque Nationale, tome LVI., 1913, col. 521-527.

The Celt in the Far West

Particulars supplied for this work show remarkable development of Celtic scholarship in Canada and the United States. A volume of Celtic studies by North American scholars, edited by Professor J. Dunn and Professor Sidney Gunn, has just been published, the contributions being as follows:—

Professor A. C. L. BROWN, North-Western University, Evanston, Illinois—"Irish Elements in the Story of King Arthur."

Professor J. M. BURNAM, University of Cincinnati, Cincinnati, Ohio—"Celtic Palæography."

Professor E. G. COX, University of Washington, Seattle, Washington—"Irish Culture and the Classics."

Professor TOM PEETE CROSS, University of Chicago, Chicago, Illinois—"Tennyson's Relation to the Celt." September, 1920.

Professor JOSEPH DUNN, The Catholic University, Washington, D.C.—"The Irish Epic."

ALEXANDER FRASER, LL.D., Bureau of Archives, Toronto, Canada—"The Celt in Canada."

Professor J. L. GREIG, Columbia University, New York City—"The Mabinogion."

Professor SIDNEY GUNN, U.S., Naval Academy, Annapolis, Maryland—"The Ossianic Legend," Professor ANATOLE LEBRAZ, Columbia University, New York City.

Professor W. W. LYMAN, University of California, Berkeley, California.

Rev. T. J. SHAHAN, Rector, The Catholic University, Washington, D.C.—"General Aspects of Celtic Thought."

Professor GERTRUDE SCHEPPERLE (Mrs Roger Sherman Loomis), Vassar College, Pougkeepsie, New York.

All of these men are Celtic scholars with the exception of Professor Burnam and Rector Shahan, who are interested in collateral subjects.

In connection with the American Modern Language Association, a Celtic group is being formed which will include all interested in Celtic studies who are connected with institutions of learning in the United States and Canada. Another and larger group will include representatives of all branches of the Celtic race—Scottish, Irish, Welsh, Breton, Cornish, and Manx.

The object is to stimulate in the Western Hemisphere an interest in Celtic studies and to demonstrate the debt of modern civilisation to the Celt. All who desire to help ought to communicate with Professor Gunn, as above.

It may also be noticed that Mr Henry Blackwell, New York, is engaged on a book to contain biographies of all Celtic writers and accounts of their publications.

September, 1920.

BUCHANAN ...

THE SACRED BARD OF THE HIGHLANDS.

BY LACHLAN MACBEAN

THE POEMS OF DUGALD BUCHANAN, rendered into English Verse, and his CONFESSIONS, with his Picturesque Life, and an Analysis of his Poetic Forms.

Buchanan is the most sublime of all the Gaelic bards, and his works are here reproduced in English verse with all the force and fervour of the original. The lofty imagery of "The Day of Judgment," the shrewd incisiveness and virile power of "The Skull," the striking picture of "The Hero," or ideal man, and the philosophy of life embodied in the many-coloured stanzas of "The Dream," are worthy of the race whose mentality they so vividly express.

In the "Confessions," on the other hand, we see unveiled the dramatic struggles of the human spirit agonising for deliverance. In this case, complicated by a terrible episode in which the romantic Rebellion of the Clans who followed Prince Charlie in 1745, resulted in a parallel tragedy in the experience of this poet.

This is the first complete Edition of Buchanan's Works and his Life.

An admirable English version of the Spiritual Songs.—THE SCOTSMAN.

Here is a type of spiritual experience to which we are strangers, to which our own time offers no parallel. Among the human documents of enduring interest and psychological value.—THE TIMES.

A valuable contribution to our knowledge of the byeways of Scottish religion in the eighteenth century.—THE BRITISH WEEKLY.

Conveys to the English reader the precise sentiment, as nearly as may be, of the Gaelic original. Mr Macbean's prefatory sketch of the poet's life is of absorbing interest. —GLASGOW HERALD.

THE STORY OF ... ...
PET MARJORIE

The Immortal Wonder-Child and Playmate of Sir Walter Scott

Her Newly-Discovered Journals and Portraits
Numerous Illustrations. Facsimiles of Child's Letters.

BY LACHLAN MACBEAN

Author of "Songs and Hymns of the Scottish Gael," "Burgh Records and Annals of Kirkcaldy," "Buchanan, the Sacred Bard," &c.

SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT & CO.,
4 STATIONERS' HALL COURT, :: :: LONDON, E.C.

Enchanting but elusive glimpses of an ethereal child figure known as Pet Marjorie have caused many people in both Britain and America to express a desire for fuller revelations. The complete story and diaries of little Marjory Fleming, hitherto unpublished, are therefore set forth in these pages, and thus what might else appear a mere pleasing phantasy is fastened down to earth with links of time and place and human relationship.

Opinions of the Press on The Story of Pet Marjorie

To those who would know perhaps the most attractive child of whom record has been written, we would say—Read this book.—THE ACADEMY.

Here we are able, for the first time, to read the complete writings of "the darling child."—DAILY CHRONICLE.

The immortal child ! A very welcome volume.—DAILY MAIL.
